3. ——— Acknowledgment given by one partner when binding on the firm—Partnership—Practice—Parties—Same person both plaintiff and defendant. The plaintiff, as heir of his mother, sued a firm, in which he was himself a partner, to recover the amount of certain loans which he alleged that his mother in her lifetime had made to the said firm. The plaintiff was made a defendant in the suit along with the other partners. The alleged loans were made on the 2nd November 1881 and the 12th October 1882. The present suit was not filed until December 1885. The plaintiff, however, relied on an acknowledgment signed in his mother's account book by himself as partner in the firm on the 1st November 1883. The first defendant did not appear, or put in any defence. The second defendant pleaded limitation, and alleged that, on the 2nd November 1880, prior to the date of the alleged loans he had retired from the firm, and therefore was not liable. From the evidence given at the hearing it appeared that the business stopped, so far as buying and selling and fresh trading were concerned at the end of the year 1881, and that subsequently to that date the partners were occupied solely in winding up the affairs of the firm. Held, that, under the circumstances, the acknowledgment given by the plaintiff did not bind the other partners, and that the claim against them was barred. If, at the time the acknowledgment was given the firm had been a going concern, the plaintiff's authority to make such an acknowledgment on behalf of the firm might have been presumed: but in this case the business had been closed, and the partnership entirely dissolved. The presumption, therefore, which arises in active partnership, no longer existed, and there was no evidence that the plaintiff had been expressly authorized to act for the other partners in making the acknowledgment. The meaning of the word "only" in s. 21 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), is that it must also be shown that the partner signing the acknowledgment had authority, express or implied, to do so. In a going mercantile concern such agency is to be presumed as an ordinary rule. PREMJI LUDHA v. DOSSA DOONGERSEY

4. ——— Acknowledgment signed by one of several partners. The word "only" in s. 21 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) is not to be treated as a surplusage. It means that the mere writing or signing of an acknowledgment by one partner does not necessarily of itself bind his co-partner, unless it can be shown that he had otherwise power to bind that partner for the purpose of making such acknowledgment and in effect purported so to bind him. The action was brought on a lease which expired in 1854. The defendant denied the lease, and contended that the suit should be dismissed, as it could not be maintained by the widow in her own name. In 1871, the son, who had in the meantime attained his majority in 1865, was made a co-plaintiff on his own application. Held, that the suit was barred, inasmuch as it must, if maintainable, be deemed to have been instituted in 1871, when the son was made a co-plaintiff, the plaint previously to that time having been in the widow's own name and expressly on her own behalf. Held, also, that making the son a co-plaintiff in 1871 could not change the character of the suit as it had existed previous to that date, so as to defeat the law of limitation. Held (by PINHEY, J.), that the minor was wrongly made a plaintiff in 1871. *Dhurm Dass Pandey v Sham Soondri Dabiah, 6 W R P. but the periods of limitation provided by Act IX of 1871 do not necessarily apply to defendants so added. The plaintiff and three of the defendants, being four members of a partnership, consisting of which they gave their joint and several promissory notes, and shortly afterwards two of the partners retired, leaving the plaintiff and the four defendants alone constituting the firm. On 27th September 1865, the plaintiff and first defendant were sentenced to transportation for life, and on 15th April 1867 one of the other defendants became insolvent. On 25th April 1867, the liquidators of the Commercial, Finance and Stock Exchange Corporation obtained a decree against the plaintiff and the three defendants who had joined in the making of the promissory notes for the amount due on their joint and several promissory notes and costs. In March 1868, the immoveable and moveable property of the plaintiff and the moveable property of the first defendant were sold in execution, and the whole of the proceeds of the plaintiff's immoveable property, together with the balance of the proceeds of the moveable properties of the plaintiff and first defendant, after satisfying thereout two prior decrees against them, were applied in part satisfaction of the decree of 25th April 1867, and the moneys so recovered were distributed to the shareholders by the liquidators, who, however, retained in their hands such portion as would have been payable in respect of the shares held by the judgment-debtors fit of Act XXVIII of 1865, and obtained their discharge in April and December 1869. The plaintiff therefore sued the first defendant alone on 18th March 1873 as contributory for the satisfaction of the joint decree, but subsequently, by amendment made on the 6th February 1874, added the other defendants, and prayed for a decree that he was entitled to receive and appropriate the balance of R25,212, and that the first defendant should pay to the plaintiff, the balance of the moneys paid by him as the manager of the family Subsequently at a late stage of the suit, the defendants having raised an objection of non-joinder of parties, the other first Court allowed the claim. The Judge in appeal reversed the decree and dismissed the suit as time-barred under s. 22 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Held, reversing the decree of the Judge and restoring that of the first Court, that s 22 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) does not in itself purport to determine directly whether the joinder of the parties after the institution of a suit shall in all cases necessarily involve the bar of limitation, if the period prescribed for such a suit has then expired. Such a result must depend upon consideration of the question whether the joinder was necessary to enable the Court to award the institution of the suit as regards such freshly joined parties does not ordinarily affect the right of the original plaintiff to continue the suit and would not therefore attract the application of the general provisions of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) The question of the right of a manager to sue in that capacity is rather one of authority, if the other co-sharers are adults, and the right to ... brought on ... defendant to ... tion and is being taken at an early stage, the objection on the score of want of authorization being one of a character, which it would clearly be open to the defendant to waive. 11. ——— Easement—Prescription—Right of way—Continuance of enjoyment as of right—Cessation of user—Actual user. No rule can be laid down as to what would or would not constitute a continuance of the enjoyment as of right of a right of way, when there has been no exercise it for any given period ; that must depend upon the circumstances of each case and the nature of the right claimed. For the plaintiff to succeed [illegible]

years, there must, when there is no user for a long time, be circumstances from which the Court can infer the continuance of enjoyment as of right over the whole statutory period, and the cessation of the user must be at least consistent with such continuance. The enjoyment required by the Act cannot be in abeyance, and at the same time continue so as to give the plaintiff the special right claimed. The question of continued enjoyment is an inference to be drawn from facts, rather than one of fact, and if there are no facts to sustain the inference, a decision in favour of such enjoyment cannot stand. The plaintiffs sued the defendant for the declaration of a right of way, as acquired under s. 26 of the Limitation Act, over a plot of land belonging to the defendant. It was alleged that in April 1892 the defendant dispossessed the plaintiffs from the dominant tenement ; and that the plaintiffs sued the defendant for recovery of possession of it under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, and, having obtained a decree, got possession on the 19th June 1895. It was further alleged that thereupon the defendant, on the 21st June 1895, obstructed the disputed way by erecting sheds. The present suit was instituted on the 25th November 1895. Held, that, the enjoyment of the right of way on the part of the plaintiffs not having continued until within two years of the institution of the suit, the suit must fail. *Koylash Chunder Ghose v. In 1867 a suit was brought by the father of the present first plaintiff against a third party for the recovery of the land. The present defendant was not a party to that suit. In 1874, in execution of the decree in that suit, passed in favour of the plaintiff therein, the Subordinate Court appointed a Commissioner to make a local investigation and submit a report showing the land to be delivered to the plaintiff therein. The Commissioner personally inspected the land and, in his report, mentioned that the present defendant, though not a party to that suit, raised the objection that the boundaries fixed by the Commissioner of the land to be delivered to the plaintiff therein included land belonging to the present defendant. The report was considered by the Subordinate Judge, but the present defendant apparently did not appear before him, and the Subordinate Judge heard the parties to that suit and confirmed the plan prepared by the Commissioner and ordered delivery to be given to the plaintiff in that suit of the land shown in the plan. That order was modified by the District Court [illegible]

but, as the marks which had previously been placed on the land had been washed away, the Nazir fixed the boundaries again, on this occasion also the present defendant's officials appeared before the Nazir and objected to his delivering over the land, and requested him to communicate their objection to the Court. The delivery was, however, made to the plaintiff in that suit, in the presence of the present defendant's officials, and in spite of their objection raised on his behalf. In 1889, the present suit was instituted by the son of the plaintiff in the former suit (and another) to recover possession of the same piece of land, when it was objected for the defendant that, though the delivery of the land in 1877 might be operative as a transfer of possession to the decree-holder as against the [illegible]

——— Arts. 18, 120—Land taken under Land Acquisition Act—Refusal by Collector to give award—Possession taken by Government Land had been taken under the Land Acquisition Act, possession having been taken by the Collector before an award was made The Collector subsequently refused to give an award, on the ground that the land belonged to Government More than one year after the Collector's refusal to give an award the present suit was instituted for a declaration that the land belonged to the plaintiffs and for recovery of possession or in the alternative for damages for the wrongful refusal of the Collector to give the award The finding was that the land was the plaintiff's; but the plea of limitation was raised:—Held, that the suit was not barred by limitation. The land had vested absolutely in Government, and so plaintiffs were not entitled to recover possession, but could only claim damages for breach of a statutory duty on the Collector's part. The suit contemplated by Art. 18 of the Limitation Act is one for compensation for non-completion and that article does not apply to a case in which the land has vested in Government. Art 120, therefore, governed the suit. MANTHA-RAVADI VENKAYYA v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE (1904) . . . I. L. R. 27 Mad. 535

The wrong complained of was the payment to the defendants of the sale-proceeds, to which the plaintiff was entitled. Art. 29 did not apply, because so long as the property remained in the custody of the Court, it was not lost and plaintiff could not claim any compensation for its loss. The loss of the property was not a necessary consequence of the attachment, as the Civil Procedure Code contains provisions, which enable the party to establish his right and recover the property attached. Art. 29 only applied when the loss complained of was directly due to the seizure. Art. 49 did not apply as the suit was not for any specific moveable property and the defendants had not wrongfully taken, injured or detained such property. Per SIR ARNOLD WHITE, *C. name was registered in the record of rights in respect of his proprietary rights in a certain village. In 1871 G died, and on her death B, R, and M preferred separate claims to have their names registered in respect of such rights The Assistant Settlement officer before whom these claims came for decision, professing himself unable to decide disposed of the case on the evidence taken by the Assistant Settlement officer, and held that the claimants were in joint possession of such rights, and it was proper that the name of each should be registered in respect of a one-third share of such rights He at the same time intimated to the parties that, unless they settled their claims in the Civil Court or by arbitration before the khewat was framed, it would be framed as he had directed. In 1873 R died, and on her death M procured the registration of his name in respect of her one-third share. In 1879 B sued M for possession of the one-third share which he had obtained under the proceeding of the Settlement officer, and of R's one-third share, claiming as heir to her deceased husband D, and alleging that M was not the legitimate son of D, and was therefore not entitled to succeed to such rights M set up as a defence that, as the proceeding of the Settlement officer was an award under Regulation VII of 1822, and the suit was one to contest such award, and it had not been brought within three years from the date of such award, the suit was barred by limitation :—Held, that the suit was not barred by limitation under No. 44, Sch II of Act IX of 1871, or, No. 45, Sch. II, Art 46* One R, who was the owner of the land in dispute, mortgaged it to P in July 1870 In October 1876, B, a tenant of the land, obtained an injunction against R restraining him from interfering with his (B's) possession in a possessory suit which was filed in the Mamlatdar's Court in May 1876. In July 1877, P obtained a decree on his mortgage, and in execution he got possession of the property from R (the mortgagor) in June 1879 The plaintiff who was the assignee of both P and R (mortgagee and mortgagor), sued B in ejectment in September 1888. Both the lower Courts allowed the claim On second appeal by B, the plaintiff (inter alia) contended that, having taken an assignment of the mortgage from the mortgagee, he was not bound by the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court in 1876 against the mortgagor. But held that, when the plaintiff, having previously taken an assignment of P's mortgage, purchased the equity of redemption from R, the mortgage was extinguished, there being no circumstance from which an intention could be presumed to keep it alive. The plaintiff could not stand in a better position than R, and was bound by the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court, notwithstanding that he had taken an assignment of P's mortgage In those proceedings the defendant had claimed a right of permanent possession as against R, and the effect of the Mamlatdar's order was to continue him in possession until ejected by the decree of a Civil Court. It was therefore incumbent upon R to bring a suit within three years from the Mamlatdar's order, as provided by Art 46, Sch. II of the Limitation Act (IX of 1871), and that not having been done, the plaintiff, who derived his title from R, could not recover possession from the defendant. deciding that it arose on the date of the loan or deposit.

Under Art. 58 of the Act of 1871, the cause of action in cases of money lent on demand arose from the date of the demand, cases of money deposited on demand not being separately provided for. Under Art. 59 of the present Act, the cause of action in cases money lent on demand arises from the date of the loan; in the case of money deposited on demand, from the date of the demand (Art. 60).

2 ——— Native banker and customer—Deposit—Loan—Suit to recover money lodged with a native banker more than three years after lodgment The relationship between a native banker and the person depositing money with him in the ordinary way of business is that of borrower and lender, and the money lodged can be recovered as money lent. Art. 59 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applies to such a transaction. The plaintiffs, who were members of the Dalvadi community, sued in 1883 to recover from the defendants the sum of R2,611-3-6 as found credited to their account in 1880 by the defendants' father, with whom the community had lodged a sum of R2,320 in 1874. They alleged that the sum was lodged on the condition that it was to be returned with interest on demand It appeared that small sums were paid by K to the plaintiffs from time to time, and no demand had ever been made during the lifetime of K for repayment. The defendants denied the alleged condition, and contended that the suit was barred. The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiffs' claim. The defendants appealed to the Assistant Judge, who reversed the decree, being of opinion that the transaction was a loan and not a deposit, and that the suit was barred. On appeal by the plaintiffs to the High Court:—Held, confirming the decree of was lodged as a deposit and not as a loan, and that Art. 60 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act applied. They relied upon the following circumstances as showing the nature of the transac- . the money opportunity ... olding of a dharmshala; (ii) that interest was to be paid upon it, (iii) that the account was to be annually settled; (iv) that it was to be withdrawn in one sum—Held, that these circumstances, if proved, did not necessarily deprive the transaction of the character of a loan by creating a fiduciary relationship between the parties (which is essential to a deposit in its technical sense), and thus distinguishing it from the ordinary dealings between native bankers and their customers ICHHA DHANJI v. As payment was not made, he caused the defaulters' moveable property to be sold on the 18th May 1881 as for an arrear of land revenue, and part of the sale-proceeds to be paid over to the office-holder. The defaulters had, in the meantime, appealed to the Revenue Commissioner, who eventually on the 17th December 1881, amended the Collector's order by reducing very considerably the amount of contribution to be paid to the office-holder. Thereupon the defaulters filed a suit on the 9th April 1884 to recover from the office-holder the difference between what he had received under the Collector's order and what he ought to have received according to the Revenue Commissioner's order Held, that the suit was one for money had and received by the defendant to the plaintiff's use, and as such governed by Art. 62 of Sch. These are cases where the suit was, when Act IX of 1871 came into force, already barred under Act XIV of 1859. But in Madras case the principle was held to be the same where the suit was not barred under that Act at the time Act IX of 1871 came into force.

5. ——— Promissory note—Novation. The holder of a promissory note payable on demand, dated 14th April 1870, demanded payment on 8th December 1872. The maker then paid interest in advance up to 1st April 1873, upon the condition that the holder should make no demand until that date:—Held, that this transaction amounted to the substitution of a new contract for that contained in the promissory note; that the period of limitation must be reckoned from 1st April 1873; and that consequently a suit to recover the balance due on the note, instituted on 27th March 1876, was not barred. If disputes should so arise, the respective party should be answerable to the extent of his private property " A was deprived of some of the lands he got by the exchange and he sued B on the above covenant for the value of the lands, of which he was dispossessed The suit was brought more than six years after the exchange and more than three, but less than six years, after the date of deprivation —Held, that the suit was not a suit for specific performance but a suit for compensation for breach of a contract in writing registered and for purposes of limitation, fell within Art. 116 and not 113 of Sch II of the Limitation Act. The rule that in actions for damages for breach of covenant of title in a sale, the breach must be held to have occurred as and from the date of sale, does not apply, when there is a special contract. 1. ——————— Mutual dealings—Balance of accounts. The test of whether dealings are mutual within s. 8 of Act XIV of 1859 or not seems to be were they such that the balance was sometimes in favour of one party and sometimes of the other. It is not necessary that there should have been such a buying or selling by each of the parties, so as to constitute him a trader within the strict meaning of the term GHASSEERAM v. MONOHUR DOSS . 2 Ind. 6. ——————— Mutual dealing—Item showing continuance of account. The effect of s. 8, Act XIV of 1859, is that nothing in an account of mutual dealings between merchants and traders is to be barred, provided that there is an item indicating the continuance of such dealings proved to have occurred within the period of limitation. HIRADA BASAPPA v. GADIGI MUDDAPA 6 Mad. 142

7. ——————— Mutual accounts. To constitute a mutual account there must be transactions on each side creating independent obligations on the other, and not merely transactions which create obligations on the one side, those on the other being merely complete or partial discharges of such obligations. Thus an account consisting of entries of payments made by one party in reduction of his debt to the other, and of payments made by the latter on behalf of the former party for the same purpose, is not a mutual account within the meaning of Art. 85 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act. Hirada Basappa v. Gadigi Muddapa, [illegible] balance [illegible]

transactions several of the acceptances were dishonoured by the defendant, and the plaintiffs, at his request, allowed him to renew the bills. Some renewals took place in August and September 1866. In March, May, and July 1866, the defendant made purchases from the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs made purchases from the defendant. The plaintiffs were in the habit of closing their accounts on 30th June in each year. In an action for balance of account brought on 24th February 1870—Held, that the parties were merchants and traders having mutual dealings under s 8 of Act XIV of 1859. The year mentioned in s. 8 of Act XIV of 1859 is intended to be reckoned from the time when the balance of accounts is struck. In this case that was the 30th June 1867 ; the suit, therefore, was not barred. Quære : What would be the operation of the section in those cases in which the merchant or trader balances his accounts at the lapse of a period of less than one year? On the 1st October 1875 there was a balance due to B During the ensuing year, as computed in the account, G made payments to B exceeding such balance On the 19th November 1876 a balance of R3,600 was found to be due from G to B. On the 11th December 1876, G executed a conveyance of certain land to B, for which such debt was partly the consideration In such conveyance G acknowledged his liability in respect of such debt. He died before such conveyance was registered and it did not operate. On the 18th November 1879, B sued G's widow for such debt:—Held, that such conveyance was admissible as evidence of the acknowledgment by G of his liability for such debt notwithstanding such conveyance was not registered; that applying Art. 85, Sch. II of Act XV of 1877, such debt was not barred by limitation when such acknowledgment was made; and that, if that article was not applicable, but the period of limitation began to run from the time each item composing such debt became a debt, still such debt would not have been barred when such acknowledgment was made as the debt with which the year computed from the 1st October 1875 opened was extinguished by payments made by G in the course of that year. The general period of limitation of six years under cl. 16 of s. 1 of the Act of 1859 was necessarily much wider in its application than is Art. 120 of the present Act, so many more suits being now specially provided for. There was under the Act of 1859 a difference of three years in the period of limitation applicable to contracts registered and that applicable to unregistered contracts which could have been registered, the period being six years for the former, and three years for the latter. Suits on contracts which could not have been registered were considered as cases not specially provided for, and held to be governed by the general limitation of six years.

Pending an appeal against that decree execution was stayed on the present plaintiff depositing a note for R15,000 as security. The decree was affirmed on appeal, and the present defendant had the note sold in execution and drew out of the proceeds a sum for mesne profits for subsequent years; but an appeal was preferred in the execution proceedings to the High Court, which set aside the execution so far as concerned the mesne profits for the years subsequent to that to which the original decree related. The present plaintiff thereupon attached and sold the village to recover the balance; before that amount was paid to the present plaintiff, the present defendant brought a suit against him in the District Court and there obtained a decree for mesne profits for the subsequent years, and in the execution drew the amount of the decree out of Court. The decree provided for payment of the secured debt in various instalments by May 1895 The mortgagor died in 1883, having discharged part of the debt. The decree-holder having attached certain family property in execution, the mortgagor's two younger sons, who had not been born at the date of the above decree, objected that their shares were not liable to attachment This objection prevailed, the Court expressing the opinion that the matter in controversy should be determined in a regular suit. The other defendants in the suit of 1877 had both died in the interval, one of them leaving infant sons The decree-holder (in whose sole name the mortgage stood) now sued the sons of the mortgagor and their infant nephews in 1891 for the payment out of the family property of all the unpaid instalments —Held, that the period of limitation applicable to the suit was six years, and that time began to run for the purposes of limitation from the date when each instalment would have become due from the deceased judgment-debtor, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for payment out of the family property of all such instalments as would have so become due at the date of the suit, and for a declaration only as to the subsequent instalments. The defendant had since then been in sole possession and enjoyment of the house in dispute. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit as barred by limitation on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to prove participation in possession or enjoyment within twelve years. On appeal, the Assistant Judge held that, as no share had been demanded or refused, the defendant's [illegible] decree of the Subordinate Judge, and remanded the case for re-trial on the merits On appeal to the High Court :—Held, that the suit was barred. The fact that the house in question had admittedly remained undivided did not prevent the operation of the Limitation Act, and Art. 127 of Act XV of 1877 applied. That Article applies equally to a portion of joint family poperty left undivided as to the whole estate, and a twelve years' exclusion known to the excluded sharer, binds him in the one case as in the other. What would bar the operation of the Article in question would be a reserve of a part of the joint estate from partition and a possession of that portion conceded to, and taken by, one of the sharers as the common property of himself and the other sharers. visits resided in the family house with S and G. In 1872 G died. The plaintiff alleged that in 1876 he demanded his share, but was refused. In 1883 he filed this suit for partition. It was contended that the right of the plaintiff had become barred by the Limitation Act (XIV of 1859) and was not revived by Act XV of 1877, which was in force at the date the suit was brought. The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff's claim. On appeal the Assistant Judge reversed the decree of the Court below, holding that under cl. 13 of s. 1 of the Limitation Act (XIV of 1859) the plaintiff had his right to sue, and that such right could not be revived by the passing of the subsequent Limitation Acts (IX of 1871 and XV of 1877). 8. ——— Suit for assessment of rent on lakhiraj land after decree for resumption—Effect of decree as creating or not relationship of landlord and tenant. The plaintiff brought a suit in 1861 against C for resumption of, and for declaration of his right to, assess rent upon, C's lands within his zamindari which C held as lakhiraj. That suit was presumably instituted under Regulation II of 1819, s. 30, which related only to resumption of lakhiraj lands existing prior to 1790, but there was nothing to show conclusively under what law it was instituted, or whether the lakhiraj grant was one subsequent or anterior to 1790. In that suit an exparte decree was passed in 1863 that "the suit be decreed and the land in dispute be declared to be shukur," i.e., liable to assessment. In a suit brought in 1886 against the representatives of C, after serving a notice upon them to pay rent for the land at a certain rate, to assess the land at the rate mentioned in the notice, and for the recovery of rent at that rate:—Held, that the decree of 1863 had not the effect of creating the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties, and therefore the suit, not having been brought within twelve years from the date of that decree, was barred by Art. 130 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The assignee of the equity of redemption sued for possession of the estate on payment merely of the mortgage-money: Held, that s. 12 of Regulation V of 1827 is not in force. That section was repealed by Act XXVIII of 1855, s. 1, and although the latter section was repealed by Act XIV of 1870, the former was not restored, there being no express provision in Act XIV of 1870 to revive it, as required by the General Clauses Act (I of 1868, s. 3). The question of the period for which interest was to be allowed was therefore to be determined by Act XV of 1877, the Act in force at the date of the institution of this suit, Art 132 of which applied; but as the rule of damdupat is not affected by Limitation Acts, the defendants could not be allowed as interest more than the amount of the principal on which it was to be paid. In the present case, however, the possession held by the heir of G was not adverse to the widow in the sense of its being obtained against her will, and there was every reason to think that it was obtained in collusion with her; the reversioner's claim was therefore not barred by limitation. Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. *Gurupersad Doss, B. In 1887 the plaintiff, who succeeded G in the management of the muth, brought the present suit against the defendant, who was the vendee of B, to recover possession of the lands or to recover assessment for three years previous to the suit. Act I of 1865).* A mixed khoti village, consisting of khoti and dhara lands, belonged to two co-sharers, P and D; each of them passed kabulats to Government in alternate years till 1862-63, when P on account of his advanced age allowed D to pass the kabulat every year. In the year 1867 the survey settlement having been introduced under Bombay Act I of 1865, D refused to pass the annual kabulat. Government thereupon put the village under attachment, which was, however, removed in the year 1878 on his passing the required kabulat. The management of the village was restored to him and certain surplus profits were handed over to him by Government. In the year 1881 P sold his share in the khoti to S, who brought a suit against D and his brother to recover a half share of the abovementioned profits. D resisted the claim, denying that either P or his assignee had any right to the khoti or to share in the khoti profits. The suit was dismissed on a technical ground. Subsequently in the years 1881 and 1884, D got decrees against the actual tenants declaring that the lands, the subject-matter of the present suit, were his dhara lands, and in accordance with those decrees the revenue authorities made corresponding entries in the revenue records. In the year 1888-89 S passed a kabulat as a half sharer in the khoti, and enjoyed the khoti profits for one year. Afterwards plaintiff No 1, one of S's sons who died in the meanwhile, having passed the annual kabulat in 1892-93 and again in 1894-95 and having failed during both the years to recover khoti profits from the lands in dispute, he filed the present suit in August 1895 for a declaration that the lands were khoti, and that the defendants had fraudulently got them entered in the revenue records as dhara. had been part of the family estate, alleging title according to the Mitakshara. A question whether the plaintiffs were not barred by limitation depended on whether the now disputed part of the family property had not been from the year 1843 in the adverse possession of the widow of one of their great uncles. This widow, after transferring that part of the property to a person through whom the defendants made title, died in 1886 She was the widow of the elder of two brothers, the last co-parceners of the family, who, being sons of the said ancestor, had at one time held the family estate. This elder brother, her husband, died in 1826. His younger brother survived him, and, having taken the whole estate by survivorship, died in 1833, leaving a widow, who died in 1843. The latter widow, having inherited the estate from her husband for her life-estate, there being no co-parcener left, gave a share of her inheritance to the abovementioned widow of the elder brother So assigned, the property remained, with the addition in 1843 of the share which the younger brother's widow had kept for herself, in the possession of the other widow, the one first abovementioned. After many years, this widow transferred it to her own brother, of whom the present defendants were the heirs and representatives. It was decided below that it had not been in the right of a Hindu widow taking by inheritance from her husband that the elder brother's widow had obtained, and had dealt with, the property. A widow's estate for life never constituted a possession adverse to the reversionary heir, but here the widow, through whom the defendants claimed, had been from 1843 in adverse possession for more than twelve years The suit was therefore barred under the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) This judgment was affirmed by their Lordships MAHABIR PERSHAD v ADHIKARI KOER . . . The defendant pleaded adverse possession, and contended that the suit was barred by limitation. The plaintiff proved that up to 1879 the defendant, admitted the plaintiffs' ownership of the land. The two lower Courts found that the land was the plaintiff's, but held that the suit was barred :—Held (reversing the decree), that, the defendant having admitted the plaintiff's ownership up to 1879, it lay upon him to show when the alleged adverse possession under Art. 144 commenced, or under Art. 139, when the tenancy terminated. As the land was shown to belong to the plaintiff, and defendant had not proved any agreement under which he could remain in possession after plaintiff had signified his intention to resume, he must surrender possession. Where a decree-holder, whose right of execution has been thus temporarily suspended, dies, his representative has the same rights as he had himself to apply for and obtain a revival of the proceedings. It was contended in the above case that G had no right to apply for a revival of proceedings, unless his name was substituted on the record as J's representative, that as his right to apply for such substitution accrued immediately upon J's death, which had happened more than three years previously, so much of his application of 3rd February 1880 as related to the substitution of names was barred by Art. 178 of Sch II of Act XV of 1877; and that consequently the other portion of his application which related to execution was necessarily inadmissible inasmuch as it depended upon the substitution of G's name, which it was too late to effect Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, G's right to apply for the entry of his name in the place of that of J could not be regarded as having accrued immediately upon J's death At that time J's application for execution, being suspended by the injunction, was to all intents and purposes non-existent. Both parties resolutely refused to make such application, and the Court thereupon dealt with the case upon the materials before it and passed a decree. Upon appeal, the lower Appellate Court remanded the case for the purpose of a local investigation being held at the cost of the plaintiff in the first instance. Held, that, inasmuch as neither of the parties desired to have a local investigation, the Court was wrong in remanding the case, and that it was bound to decide it upon the evidence before it. In 1896 the defendants, the Municipal Commissioners for the City of Madras, acquired land close to plaintiff's and opened a burial and burning ground thereon. Plaintiff alleged that his premises had, in consequence thereof, become unhealthy, insanitary, and unfit for residential purposes; that he had been unable to work his factory; and that his property had deteriorated in value. He accordingly sued for an injunction restraining the defendants, from using the land acquired by them as a burial and burning ground, and for damages. No negligence was alleged or shown regarding the manner in which the burial ground had been used. There was some evidence that the burning ground was to some extent a source of nuisance to anyone who occupied plaintiff's premises, and that the market value of the premises had been depreciated by the opening of the burial ground. Held, that no actionable nuisance

Wards—Right of suit—Real payee. Where the Court of Wards assumes superintendence of the estate of a disqualified proprietor, and, in exercise of the powers conferred by s. 43 of the Court of Wards Act, ousts an usufructuary mortgagee from possession, and the manager of the Court, in the course of his management, takes from the tenants of the property promissory notes payable to himself or order for the rents and profits of the mortgaged premises, it is competent to such mortgagee or his heirs to maintain a suit on such promissory notes when the Court's superintendence comes to an end and it delivers to the mortgagee the promissory notes without however endorsing or otherwise assigning the same in writing. Dispossession of an usufructuary mortgagee under s. 43 of the Act does not convert the usufructuary into a simple mortgage. Per MILLER, J.—The position of the Court of Wards on the dispossession of the usufructuary mortgagee, is analogous to that of a receiver for the collection of rents and profits, in respect of such mortgaged properties. The real payee of the promissory note is the landlord by his agent, the manager. Before dispossession the mortgagee was the landlord for the purpose of collecting rents and profits, and subsequent to dispossession, the Court of Wards to such extent was the landlord. When the Court's superintendence terminated, its receivership came to an end and the mortgagee as the landlord was the real payee entitled to sue and recover on the promissory notes. 2. ——— Bye-law No. 48—District Municipalities Amendment Act (Madras Act III of 1897)—Covering a drain without Municipal permission. A bye-law of a Municipality had been framed under the powers conferred by an Act of 1884 as amended by an Act of 1897, and was to the following effect: "No public drain shall be covered without the permission of the Municipal Council." It had come into force in 1890 Prior to its coming into operation, an earlier bye-law had subsisted, in substantially the same terms. An occupier of premises, who had covered a drain during the subsistence of the earlier bye-law, was charged with having committed an offence under the later bye-law and contended by way of defence that he could not be convicted, inasmuch as the act complained of had been committed before the passing of the Act under which the complaint was laid He was convicted by a Bench of Magistrates:—Held, that the conviction was right. Per ARNOLD WHITE, C. J.—The bye-law applies to all drains which existed in a covered state at the time when it came into operation The word "shall" is used throughout the bye-laws in the imperative, and not with reference to time, and this is the sense in which it is used in the bye-law in question. Per BENSON, J.—A bye-law similar in terms to that under which the accused had been convicted having been in existence under the then Municipal Act at the time when the accused first covered the drain in question, the liability then incurred by him continued, under the General Clauses Act (Madras) unaffected by the passing of the present Municipal Act. The contention that the accused could not be convicted because the act complained of was committed before the present Municipal Act was passed, therefore failed PARIMANAM PILLAI v. CHAIRMAN, MUNICIPAL COUNCIL, OOTACAMUND.

lector for separate registration and assessment of the said village, but on notices being sent to the zamindar and the lessees, they filed objections which, after due enquiry, were overruled by the Collector, who ordered separate registration and fixed the assessment. On appeal, the Board of Revenue supported the action of the Collector. Whereupon the lessees appealed to the Government of Madras on the 21st September 1891, and the Government of order of the Madras Government, dated the 14th November 1891, directing the Collector to cancel

Specific Relief Act, inasmuch as the order had been already carried out. Held, also, that, if the general words of the prayer "for such other relief as the circumstances of the case may require" were to be taken as including a prayer for consequential relief, then the suit was bad for misjoinder, inasmuch as the zamindar and the lessees who were interested parties were not joined. Held, also, that not only the person applying under Act I of 1876, s 2, for separate assessment and registration must be entitled thereto, but also that the parties to the alienation must concur in the application. directed the cancellation of the Collector's order, after sanction by the Board for the separate registration of the village:—Held, that this declaration should be decreed The objection that the suit was contrary to the law enacted in s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, was not sustainable. No further relief could have been required by the plaintiff. The effect of the declaration itself for which he had sued would be sufficient to maintain the Collector's original order, which was valid in law, while the order of the Government directing its cancellation was not legal and was void. Nor was the suit defective for want of parties Another suit heard on appeal with the above, having been brought by the lessees of the entire zamindari, against the same grantee, raised the question,—what was the obli-

dars, independent talukdars, and others, who pay the revenue assessed upon their estates immediately to Government " So also the words " proprietary possession," in the recital of Regulation XXV of 1802, mean the possession of a person who is a proprietor according to the technical meaning of the term. According to the true construction of Madras Regulations XXV and XXXI of 1802, the Legislature recognizes the right of private property, and does not assert a right on the part of Government to deprive or dispossess zamindars in their life time, or their heirs after their deaths, independently of any considerations connected with the realization of the public revenue. It provides for the protection of the revenue from invalid lakhiraj grants, and for the mode of trying the validity of the titles of persons claiming so hold their lands exempt from the payment of revenue OOLAGAPPA CHETTY v. ——— ss. 4, 12—Zamindar's sanad, assets mentioned in—Quite-rent on an agraharam village—Inam title-deed, rate mentioned in—Joint liability of agraharamdars—Rent, rate of. The plaintiff was a zamindar holding his estate under a sanad dated 1802. This sanad followed almost verbatim the language of Regulation XXV of 1802, s. 4, and where it referred to "lands paying a small quit-rent," added "which quit-rent unchangeable by you is included in the assets of your zamindari." The suit was brought to recover arrears of jodi or quite-rent accrued due on an agraharam village in the zamindari. The defendants, who were the agraharamdars, had divided the village and held it in separate shares. They pleaded that they were not liable to pay jodi in excess of the rate fixed by the Inam Commissioner and specified in the inam title-deed granted by him for the village in 1869. Held, (i) that the decision of the Inam Commissioner did not affect the zamindar's claim, and that the question to be determined was what was the jodi payable in respect of the village at the time of the permanent settlement on which the peishcush of the zamindari was fixed [illegible]

——— Confinement of Native Christian in stocks—Legality of order. By s. 10 of Mad. Reg. XI of 1816, heads of villages are given summary powers of punishment in cases of a trivial nature, such as using abusive language, and if the offenders "shall be of any of the lower castes of the people, on whom it may not be improper to inflict so degrading a punishment," they may be put in the stocks. A person who was a Mala, or Hindu pariah, by birth, and who had become a convert to Christianity, was convicted of having used abusive language, and sentenced to two hours' confinement in the stocks under the said Regulation. His profession was that of a weaver, but he, in fact, worked as a coolie. On the question of the legality of the sentence being referred to the High Court:—Held, that, to render a person liable to confinement in the stocks under the Regulation, there must be a concurrence of two circumstances, viz., (i) he must be a person belonging to one of the lower castes of the people, and (ii) he must be a person on whom, from his social standing or otherwise, it may not be improper to inflict so degrading a punishment. The test is not what is the offender's creed, but what is his caste. Semble That a person who has changed his creed but continues to belong to his caste may be within the purview of the Regulation if the caste is of the nature therein referred to; but if he abandons his caste he cannot longer be said to "belong to one of the lower castes of the people" and punishment by confinement in the stocks would no longer be legal The Queen v *Nabi, I. enhancement was justified on the ground (among others) that the Government had added a corresponding increase to the water-rate and that the Deputy Collector had under s. 11, cl 4, of the Rent Recovery Act sanctioned the enhanced rent Such an order had, in fact, been passed, but it had been cancelled by the Collector, who remanded the matter to the Deputy Collector to make inquiry and to pass a fresh order, without retrospective effect. 32. ——— Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 8—Act XVI of 1874—Special and local laws Madras Act III of 1865 declared every Magistrate in the Madras Presidency authorized to take cognizance of every offence committed against any special or local law then in force in the said Presidency, notwithstanding any provision to the contrary in any act or Regulation then existing, and also of any offence against any special or local law which might thereafter be passed, unless such law should make the offences to which it might refer punishable by some other authorities therein specially mentioned. The effect of this Act was to remove the restrictions imposed by special or local laws theretofore passed, and to enable Magistrates within the limits of their ordinary powers to deal with offences punishable under any such special or local law, notwithstanding the special or local law indicated a particular tribunal as alone competent to try such offences, and to confer upon them jurisdiction also in the case of any special or local laws that might be passed after the enactment of Act III of 1865, unless jurisdiction was in any such later law specially conferred upon some other authority. S. 8 of the subsequent enactment, Act X of 1872 (the Criminal Procedure Code), limited the jurisdiction of Subordinate Magistrates over offences punishable under special and local laws, a third class Magistrate's jurisdiction being restricted to the trial of offences punishable under such laws with less than one year's imprisonment, while a [illegible]

Shortly after the execution of the settlement, the trustees took possession of the property, and for fifteen years continued to pay the rents and profits to the settlor. The settlor was married in 1866 to H, and there was issue of the marriage only one son, who died in 1872, an infant under the age of five years. H died in 1872, and the settlor remained a widow. In 1881 she became desirous of revoking the above settlement, and under s. 527 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) she stated a case for the opinion of the Court, contending that she could lawfully revoke the trusts declared by the said indenture; that if she could not revoke, then that the trust therein declared in favour of charity was void for remoteness, and generally that she was, under the circumstances, entitled to have the property reconveyed to her by the surviving trustee. Held, that the settlement was irrevocable. Reasonably clear intention A mental act although afterwards sufficiently expressed in conduct will not, unless clothed in appropriate words, create a wakf Per CURIAM: We do not think that a mere statement in a will of some gift in the past can be referred back to the date still undetermined, when that gift is afterwards alleged to have been made, or that such a narrative statement can in any view be an adequate substitute for the oral declaration of dedication to God, which the Mahomedan law appears to us imperatively to require synchronously with the act of dedication itself. There is a plain distinction between giving charity and declaring that one has given in charity. And for the purpose of fixing the origin of the wakf, if there was a wakf at all, the mere statement in a will that at some past date the testator had set apart such and such funds for charitable objects is of comparatively slight value. The mortgage was raised for the purpose of paying off arrears of rent of a patni talukh which was a part of the property inherited from the deceased. There was no evidence to show that there were any other necessary expenses connected with the deceased's estate which had to be met, nor what that estate consisted of, nor whether the arrears of rent could or could not have been paid without having recourse to the mortgage. Upon the death of G, a Mahomedan, his estate was divisible into eight shares, two of which devolved upon his son, A, one upon each of his five daughters, and one upon his widow, B The name of B only was recorded in the revenue registers in respect of the zamindari property left by G. In 1876 A and B gave to X a deed of simple mortgage of 2½ biswas out of a 5 biswas share of a village included in the said property In 1878 A and B gave to S a deed of simple mortgage of the 5 biswas, which were described in the deed as the widow's "own" property In 1882 X obtained a decree upon his mortgage for the sale of the mortgaged property, and it was put up for sale and purchased by X himself in January 1884 In February and November 1884 the daughters of G obtained ex parte decrees against A and B in suits brought by them to recover their shares by inheritance in the 5 biswas In 1885 S brought a suit upon his mortgage of 1878, claiming the amount due thereon and the sale of the whole 5 biswas. To this suit he made defendants A and B, G's daughters, and X, alleging that the decrees of February and November 1884 were fraudulently and collusively obtained, and as to the auction sale of January 1884, that the 2½ biswas were sold subject to his mortgage, he not having been made a party to the suit brought by X upon the deed of 1876, and therefore not being bound by any of the proceedings taken therein or consequent thereto It was contended that B's position as head of the family entitled her to deal with the property so [illegible]

The Court of the Judicial Commissioner held that the daughters but not the widow were excluded by custom, and calculated the share of the plaintiff on the principle that as the custom by which daughters were excluded was founded on the notion that property should not be allowed to pass into another family, the exclusion should operate for the benefit of the persons who became heirs in default of daughters who should therefore be treated as non-existent so as to let in the defendants, the nephews, and their Lordships of the Judicial Committee affirmed that view. In 1895 the plaintiff had brought a suit for maintenance against her brothers who were in possession of their father's property, and in that suit she made a compromise with them on 10th September 1896 on the terms that they would pay her an allowance of R60 per annum for life, and objection was ———— Mortgage by widow—Power to mortgage shares of minors—Mahomedan law of sale. In 1884 I, a Mahomedan, died intestate, leaving a widow, two sons, and two daughters. At the time of his death he was the owner of a certain house in Bombay. After his death his widow and his eldest son E (without the consent of the other children, who were minors) mortgaged the said house to the defendant. In 1894 a younger son and one of the daughters of I filed this suit, praying that their shares in the house might be ascertained and declared; that the house should be sold, and their shares in the proceeds handed over to them. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff's mother and adult brother E had mortgaged the house to him in 1891 as a security for a loan of R3,500 which they wanted to pay off debts incurred in rebuilding the house and to defray the marriage expenses of E. He contended that the mortgage was binding on the plaintiffs, having been made for the benefit of the family, and that, if not, the plaintiffs were bound to pay him the money due to him before claiming any share in the house. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to their shares in the said house free and discharged of the mortgage executed to the defendant. The Mahomedan law makes no provision with regard to mortgages, as such transactions are, strictly speaking, unlawful as they involve the payment of interest. As, how-

1. RIGHT OF PRE-EMPTION.

(a) GENERALLY.

1. ———— Origin of right—Law or custom—Cessation of right. The right of pre-emption arises from a rule of law by which the owner of the land is bound; and it exists no longer if there ceases to be an owner who is bound by the law either as a Mahomedan or by custom. 1. ——— Taveral—Succession—Tarwad. In Malabar the word "taverai" has several distinct meanings. In the families of the princes all times adopted the same customs, but there is the strongest presumption against the truth of this in the case of the private family. Families becoming very numerous have often split into various branches. In the language of the people, there is community of purity and impurity between them, but no community of property. In the only sense of the word with which Courts of Justice are concerned, people so related are not of the same tarwad. Where there are several houses bearing the same original tarwad name, but with an addition, and there is no evidence of the passing of a member of one house to another, there is the strongest ground for concluding that this separation has taken place. Accordingly the plaintiff's house was searched, and its floor dug up, and the plaintiff was placed in confinement for an hour or so. No property was, however, found. Thereupon the plaintiff sued the defendant to recover damages for loss of character suffered by him in consequence. Both the lower Courts decreed the plaintiff's claim, holding that it lay on the defendant to prove reasonable and probable cause for the suspicion communicated to the police and the search of the plaintiff's house. On second appeal the High Court reversed the decrees and dismissed the suit. Held (per JARDINE, J.), that the rule as to the burden of proof in suits for malicious prosecution should be extended to a case like the present. The onus therefore lay on the plaintiff not only to allege in the plaint, but also to prove against the defendant, malice and absence of reasonable and probable cause for the information given by him to the police. The plaintiff, however, had given no evidence of his own innocence nor that the suspicion of the defendant was groundless, nor that the defendant had any malice. Per RANADE, J.—The present case was governed by the principles which governed suits for defamation, and under the circumstances the action of the defendant fell within the exception which protects information given to a person in authority in the discharge of a public or private duty, where no malice in fact is shown to exist. See Nobin Chundro v. Surjo Kahlya, 11 W. R. 524. There is a distinction between the case of a false charge falling under s. 211 of the Penal Code and that of false information given to the police under s. 182. A person prosecuting another for an offence under the latter section need not prove malice and want of reasonable and probable cause except so far as they are implied in the act of giving information known to the police with the knowledge or likelihood that such information would lead a public servant to use his power to the injury or annoyance of the complainant. In an inquiry under s. 211, on the other hand, the absence of just and lawful ground for making the charge is an important element. *Ganesh Dutt Singh v. Mugneeram Chowdhry, 11 B. L. R. 321; 19 W. 23. ———————— Procuring wrongful execution of a warrant of arrest—Reasonable and probable cause. The plaintiff sued the Municipal Commissioner of Bombay for damages, alleging that the Commissioner had maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause procured a warrant to be issued against him on the [illegible] March 1892 and subsequently procured that warrant to be executed at a time when its force was spent, and under circumstances when it ought not to have been executed. From the evidence it appeared that on the [illegible] December 1891 a notice was served on the plaintiff under s. [illegible] of the City of Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888) requiring him to do certain work upon premises belonging to him. The work not having been done, a summons was issued against him on the 11th February 1892, requiring him to appear before the Presidency Magistrate to answer a charge of not having complied with the above notice. The summons was returnable on the [illegible] February 1892, and on that day the plaintiff appeared, but the hearing was postponed until the [illegible] March 1892. of the warrant of the 24th March The evidence was that on that morning at 8 o'clock, a Municipal inspector, H, who was not called as a witness at the hearing, accompanied by a Police sepoy, went to the plaintiff's house and pointed out the plaintiff to the sepoy who arrested him and took him in custody to the police station and subsequently before the Magistrate He was released on depositing R25 as security for appearing when required. On the 16th June the plaintiff again appeared in the Police Court, when the summons was withdrawn The plaintiff claimed R10,000 as damages for malicious prosecution, wrongful arrest, and detention in custody and false imprisonment. The defendant denied that he had applied for or obtained the warrant for the plaintiff's arrest or that he or his servants had anything to do with the arrest or was responsible for it, save that a sub-inspector who knew nothing of the warrant had pointed out the plaintiff to a police officer at the latter's request. He further denied that the proceedings were malicious and without reasonable and probable cause. The lower Court (STARLING, J.) held that the de-
